

LITERARY NOTES.

Mr. Theodore Roosevelt's "Hunting Trips of a Ranchman," which is in the press of G. E. Putnam's Sons, is to be issued in a large octavo edition of 500 copies, intended for subscribers. It is to be lavishly illustrated by Frost, Gifford, Beard and Sandham.

The same house is preparing to publish a novel by C. M. Newell, entitled "Kamechanga, the Great."

In the April number of "The Andover Review," the editorial discussion of the crusade against the common schools is continued in an article entitled "School or Scholar." Dr. Newman Smyth begins a short series of sermons on the Labor Problem, recently preached to workmen, which in their delivery attracted much attention. Other timely and interesting articles are on "Bach and Handel," on "Co-operative Creation" and on "The Moral Purpose of the Later American Novel."

Mr. Martin F. Tupper writes to the editor of "The Brooklyn Magazine" that he has lost fortune and is vexed by debt, not incurred by his own fault.

The Old South Memorial Addresses delivered by the Rev. George E. Ellis and Mr. H. A. Hill, last October, have been published in a neat pamphlet by Cupples, Upham & Co. Mr. Ellis discussed the character and career of Judge Sewall, and Mr. Hill those of Joshua Scottow and John Alden.

The venerable Charles Gayarre, the historian of Louisiana, has been lecturing in New-Orleans on Mr. Cable's "Grandissimes." The veteran author naturally complained that Mr. Cable had not dealt justly with the Creole race. "The Times-Democrat," which sympathizes with Mr. Gayarre's opinions, says: "History in hand, he showed how palpably false were the historical characters introduced by the authors in his work, and how contrary to all traditions, chronicles and remembrances he had depicted manners, customs and characters, which never had any existence. Mr. Cable's characters, he said, cannot even be honored with the name of caricatures, for these must, at least, have some foundation in truth. In exemplification he analyzed the characters of Honore Grandissime, Mine, Royal and others."
